Review

"In this collection of 26 of his most important essays, Ali Mazrui probes critical issues in postcolonial Africa. He deftly segues from development to identity, the black diaspora, religion, racism, intermarriage, sexual tolerance and intolerance, and more. The unifying themes in this volume are political ideas and culture. "Spanning five decades, Mazrui's work offers a prism on the unfolding African studies. His views have dazzled the academic world, ignited controversy, and always excited audiences. "Composed with flair and imagination, these reflections on Global Africa dig beneath surface impressions to show interconnections among cultures and to cut against received wisdom about the continent. Mazrui's remarkable range takes in the broad sweep of his personal experience, a deep knowledge of Western and Eastern literature, and documentary research to sustain provocative arguments. Readers will find that this book provides intellectual gems." -James H. Mittelman, Professor of International Affairs, American University
