Why do great men and women fall? How do leaders, quick to ascend with such promise of unparalleled success, find themselves awash in disastrous failure and disgrace? More importantly, can the path toward one's downfall be discerned before it's too late and be avoided? Through the life and leadership of King Saul, the Word of God provides us with a powerful example of how leadership can destroy the man or woman whose character has not been prepared for it." By following Saul's premature rise to greatness, his failure to lead with integrity, to his ultimate self-destruction, we discover a treasury of lessons in "what not to do." If we will apply our hearts toward understanding his mistakes and recognize the patterns in our own lives, we can anticipate the pitfalls and prevent our own demise.

Every seminary, Bible College & church leadership team should make this book a required reading

By Olga Brandenberger

Without a doubt one of the most positive and character impacting books for anyone seeking a position of leadership or already in one. No doubt it has raised the bar on what it takes to be a leader that walks with integrity. This book should be REQUIRED reading in every seminary, Bible College and church leadership team. The practical advice for every day leading (with real upto date examples of leadership failures/successes) accompanied by the word of God make this a must read and study book. I highly recommend this book. Buy it for your pastor, for your whole leadership team, and for yourself. You won't regret the investment.

A word for the wise

By Richard Catapano

"Where are the 'Saul's' of God?" The answer might just be staring at us in the mirror! So is the warning cast in this work by Gregg Johnson on the life of King Saul and the pitfalls he faced in his life and ministry. Mixing Biblical wisdom with his own experiences, the author asks many questions of any future leader of the Body of Christ. All of those questions point us to humble and prayerful consideration of our character and ethics, and how they will reflect the Master we are called to serve. This book is an excellent source for any discipleship class or individual study on the causes of failure in Christian leadership/service, and how to avoid them. It is applicable to both the ordained professional and the servant in the pew. The proactive steps of patient preparation, self-examination, submission and accountability will help any future leader to prepare not only their own walk, but also how to reach a hand back to those who are following in their footsteps. Smart people learn from their own mistakes, wise ones learn from the error of others. A must read for multiple staffs!
