In-Extremis Medical Care

By T.A.L. Dozer

My disclaimer, I am not a doctor or medical professional. My medical training has entailed Combat Life Saver, Special Operations Tactical Combat Casualty Care, Emergency Medical Technician - Intermediate (EMT-I) and EMT-T (Tactical) (both of which I am not current) and various medical cross-training I have received from Special Forces medics. My experience has included treating combat wounded personnel (all trauma related) and provided third world medical support and assistance in South-west Asia and Africa. So my review and recommendation is from my perspective on this topic.

This book does an excellent job of providing advance skills to layman and professional. I found with my limited medical background the information presented in this book, I could accomplish in-extremis situations. I have read various books on emergency, primitive, survivalist and backcountry medical care and none have compared to this text. Some of the books in my library I am referring to are listed below;

"Ditch Medicine: Advanced Field Procedures for Emergencies" by Hugh Coffee

"Where There Is No Doctor" by David Werner

"Where There Is No Dentist" by Murray Dickson

"Wilderness Medicine" by Paul Auerbach

"Special Operations Forces Medical Handbook" By USSOCOM

"Emergency War Surgery" By NATO

"Emergency War Surgery" By Walter Reed Medical Center (different from NATO version above)

All the above titles are excellent but, again I do believe they do not stand up to this title. If I was to pick one book above to use in conjunction with this book for my operational use, it would be Werner's book "Where There is No Doctor" just because this book has proved indispensable to me overseas in non-trauma related situations.

Overall I highly recommend this mammoth book on improvised, down-and-out medical care. I am sure this book will find its way to shelf of Special Forces medics, Survivalist, "bush" doctors and medical professionals as well as be required reading for all the fore mentioned.

Ridiculous and Impractical

By Rebecca Gaylor

I am a RN and my husband is a MD that does mostly vascular prodecures. We have started doing mission work in the Belizean jungle and have been loading up on reference books to take with us on our next trip as we are pretty much limited to the supplies we bring ourselves. We love "Where There Is No Doctor" and "Oxford Handbook of Tropical Medicine". I read each review for Improvised Medicine and was surprised when we read through the book when it arrived a few days ago. The content is laughable, litterally, we had uncontrollable laughter at the suggestions of "care" in this book! Under amputations it said to build a trough, fill it with 150LBS of "crushed ice" and soak the patient's limb in there to numb it, then take the patient to OR where the OR team is waiting??!!! First who has time or matierials to build a trough in the middle of "Extreme" places? Second, unless you are in Alaska, where are you going to find 150lbs of ice? Crushed ice at that! And an entire OR team is available to you, but no one has anything to medically numb the patient? In most sections of the book you would have to go to speciality store or look online to buy the items he suggests for medical care, you surely aren't going to find them just laying around. I can see where non medical people wouldn't know how ridiculous and impractical this book is, because on the surface it may sound like "okay, maybe that would work". We returned it! There are too many practical books out there. Don't buy this book unless you are giving it as a gag gift to someone in the medical field!
