Review

Bonafont showcases his diversity as a writer - exhibiting a variety of writing styles, including the poetic and dark, "My lids droop. I am a canvas sack of stones and sand yearning for the earth", to scientifically charged description "Countless tightly wound copper wire coils and arrays of foil "magneto-receivers"...", and the humorous "...Jeremy professed his love in a multitude of ways...even extending to an inedible heart shaped cake".

...this collection of work has been constructed close to the author's heart.

Invisible creatures that control our hearts, an enormous lovelorn space whale, and a machine that can find your ideal match are just some of the strangely compelling ideas that inhabit the weird tales in this debut collection of short stories. Equal parts romance and horror, with bits of steampunk and fringe science, these tiny chronicles examine what draws us together and what pulls us apart in new and disturbing ways.

Smart, fun, weird, and teachable science fiction

By C. C. Watt

This first collection of short stories by Javier Bonafont contains some real gems, including several takes on the notion that we are being controlled by parasitic beings with their own agendas. As an English teacher who dabbles in science fiction literature, I can say that these stories are teachable, provocative, and accessible even to novice readers. The Final Letter of Dr. Morris Stanley is particularly well-realized and effective in the classroom. Bonafont has a powerful voice, at times Lovecraftian or steampunk, at times lyrically modern, and I look forward to his next collection.

a cool new book of sci fi stories

By Lisa M. Johnson

I really enjoyed Javier Bonafont's debut collection of intriguing science fiction stories. The stories are well-written, crisp in description, humorous, and thoughtful. They delve into our consciousness and emotions, why we do the things we do....Several of the stories are interconnected, which is enjoyable. This is not a book to pick up if you have insomnia, as the stories lead you into strange and somewhat disturbing, though entertaining, fictional worlds. Mr. Bonafont's stories are quite imaginative--kind of a cross between "The Twilight Zone" and "Antiques Roadshow" (though I'm kidding, they do cross dimensions of time and space). He also drew the interesting cover illustration. You'll be glad you purchased this collection. I look forward to reading more of his fiction!

My Review

By cjrobison

I liked this book for several reasons, one being that Javier is a childhood friend. This book is exactly what I would have seen him writing. In Third grade, everyday after school, we would go to Javier's house and watch "Outer Limits".

I like his writing style, and would read more from him. I am happy with my purchase. I am also happy to support Javier in his writing.

I would recommend this to anyone who likes Science Fiction, and imaginative writing.
